A few words from our volunteers

"Children in foster care are vulnerable, fragile and sometimes difficult but at the same time they are incredibly resilient, funny, charming, delightful and awe-inspiring!"

— Bernadette Varley, CASA Advocate

"Everyone in the system has their own interest to defend: DCP&P, lawyers, biological parents, resource parents, etc. CASA advocates view and report on the kids, their environment, and their best interest with a unique objectivity."

— Betsy Capp, CASA Advocate

Jessie's Story

CASA Volunteer Reina Advocates for Child with Special Needs

Jessie, age 5 and autistic, was removed from his home due to neglect. Prior to his removal, there were several reports of authorities finding him alone, without proper clothing, around the neighborhood. His mother suffered from mental health issues and substance abuse problems. Jessie was placed with his maternal grandparents. Despite their best efforts, the extent of Jessie's special needs was overwhelming them. They had, in the beginning expressed doubts as to whether they would be able to care for him due to his special needs.

CASA advocate Reina was assigned to the case. She visited Jessie both at his placement home and several times at school. In all her reports, she was steadfast in advocating for vital services for Jessie which ultimately helped improved his behavior and assisted with his care in his placement home. Services advocated for included applied behavior analysis therapy, a home health aide, financial assistance for a babysitter and enrollment in summer camp.

While Reina ensured that Jessie was receiving the help he needed to thrive in his new placement, his mother was taking appropriate steps to address her mental health problems and substance abuse issues. Jessie's case was closed when his grandparents were granted guardianship, with the acknowledgment that his mother was to have liberal visitation.
